

“Sometimes we go through our daily lives and are overcome by all the stress and busyness of our modern world. It can numb our senses and make us feel like the walking dead. It’s easy to forget that the world we live in is an amazing place, filled with fascinating natural objects, a place that can refresh us and make us feel alive again. As I go about my daily routines, I try to focus on the natural world around me. Whether it is taking a walk through the nearby woods, walking my dogs in a local park, or stopping to view some tiny jewel of an insect, I find that I do not want to pull myself away. So instead of separating myself from these natural wonders, I surround myself with them, collecting individual specimens, taking photographs, and making artworks. In all of these things, I find solace and peace and reminders of my faith. A breeze is God’s caress across my face, a leaf is a symbol for growth, a butterfly is a reminder of our potential for transformation into something better than we are today. For the first time here, I am presenting a combination of landscape views and individual specimens to give a sense of the larger view that I take in life. I hope that this work helps you to take a step from the stresses of modern life into the Land of the Living.”
